It was 1912. Brett Howard was a middle-aged cowboy who was the foreman of a cattle ranch pushing a heard of cattle to the market in Wichita. The drive is the mirror image of the old west, complete with modern day gunfight. To his good fortune, a deceased boss, provided him with a small piece of grazing land, just outside of Plainview, Texas. While viewing the scenic beauty of the landscape, and by a strange coincidence, he noticed a goeey, black substance on his boots. It was oil.

After a long struggle and financial hardship, the cowboy finds he's in the oil business. His life changed drastically and becomes an overnight success. Brett Howard, along with the new lady in his life, build the business to one of the giants in the oil industry. He survives the crash of '29, and expanded their wildcat drilling into Southern California.

This chronicle portrays one man's struggle and all that the business had to offer, in the way of new opportunity and excitement. Great, humorous reading with considerable adventure and love. Don't miss all the yarn has to offer.
