Introduction from the Author

I must admit, the University of Kentucky runs through my bloodstream like a fish. Nearly every person in my family that has gone to college has gone to UK, and I am no exception. However, I didn't choose to go to UK; it sort of chose me. Many of the kids that attend UK have similar stories; it is definitely one of those big state schools whose main attraction is to local kids looking for in-state tuition.

Members of my family hold degrees from UK in engineering, political science, accounting, and now, finally, journalism (somebody had to be the creative one). There are many "true blue" fans out there that can't see UK past its famous basketball or infamous football programs—UK is sort of a jock haven. However, believe it or not, there are nooks inside this giant institution that everyone can find a place to belong, even if they never catch Wildcat basketball fever.

UK has some wonderful things to be proud of—several top schools including pharmacy and medicine, award-winning music programs, and an outstanding sense of school pride. Wildcat fans aren't just on campus or even in Lexington; they can be found statewide, nationwide, and even worldwide. One of the best things UK provided for me was the opportunity to study abroad in England for a semester. On a backpacking trip through Italy, I met another backpacker from New Mexico who happened to be wearing a UK baseball cap. I asked him if he was from Kentucky, and he said, "No, but I LOVE your basketball team!" Many people at UK eat, sleep, and breathe basketball. If you are one of these people, UK may very well be the school for you. If sports nuts get on your every last nerve, you might want to consider a different university.

I mentioned before that UK has been such an important part of my family history. The reality is that the school almost seems like a family member. You may not like everything about your Uncle Wally; he may get on your nerves sometimes, and you may wonder how in the world you share the same genetics, but the fact is that he is in your family and you love him either way.

It is my prayer for you that this book will help you decide the correct path for your future. Consider your interests and follow your heart. If it happens to lead you to Lexington, tell everyone I said hello.

Rock on.
