Trust has always been difficult for successful writer Alexis Mohr. If there is one thing her past has taught her, it's that people just can't be counted on to do the right thing, to care about anyone other than themselves. Struggling with the self-loathing, shame, and fear ingrained in her psyche by an abusive ex-girlfriend, Alex is hesitant to put herself out there and try again. Sure she'll never find someone that can love her for who she is, she resigns herself to simply writing about all-consuming love instead of experiencing it.

Dr. Nichole Pierce moved back to her hometown after finding her girlfriend in bed with another woman. Torn between the comfort of being near her twin sister again and the embarrassment of her latest relationship failure, Nikki limits the amount of time she spends at home, refusing to cause stress in her sister's marriage. Determined to avoid being hurt again, she sticks with casual dating and immersing herself in work. As long as she's busy, she can't think about what a mess her life has turned out to be.

Thrown together by near tragic events one late winter day, the attraction is instantaneous but can these two women overcome their fears and learn to trust again or will they succumb and lose their chance at happiness?
