What's a boy to do when he meets a monster that makes no sense?

The last few nights at home, Peter McBrody had been accused of doing all sorts of strange things. Floors had been painted with flour, bed linens had been eaten, and milk floated in the sink.

"It's not me," Peter said.

"Then who do you suppose did it?" asked his mother.

"A monster?" Peter said, not sure if that made any sense.

"There are no monsters," his mother replied.

Peter was certain monsters were real. After all, he had one. His monster loved things that didn't make any sense and if he didn't figure out how to get rid of it, he'd be grounded forever.

What would you do?
